Stained glass windows will move along with the rest of Children's Hospital
May 23, 2017
By Karen Robinson
The Buffalo News

Vibrant, multi-colored stained glass windows grace Libby's Chapel just off the lobby of Women & Children's Hospital of Buffalo.

The main panel of windows is a strong presence in the chapel, showing children playing sports, a mother holding her infant, an expectant mother and a doctor with a stethoscope examining a young child. There even is a black-and-white soccer ball in the mix of illustrations, all mostly crafted in bright reds, blues and greens.

The windows will move to the Buffalo Niagara Medical Campus when the hospital relocates to the John R. Oishei Children's Hospital in November.

"They're gorgeous," said Brian Pempsell, a 41-year employee of Children's Hospital and the facility's lead painter.

The stained glass windows will move to a designated meditation space on the fifth floor of Oishei. The meditation space will also serve as a place for families to pray and worship, but it will not be called a formal chapel in an effort to keep it nondenominational.